Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The White Pine, Vol. 6: Series of Architectural Monographs; A New England Village Far from the madding crowd s ignoble strife, Their sober wishes never learned to stray: Along the cool, sequestered vale of life They kept the noiseless tenor of their way. When Zabdiel Podbury fled from Stoke-on-Tritham in the Spring of 1689 with Drusilla Ives, taking passage on the bark Promise, sailing for Massachusetts Bay, it was not realized at the time that, from this union, and the joint labors of the Pen-theselean pair, the village of Stotham (so named by them in memory of their autochthonous abode) would in later days come to be regarded as a typical example, although, perhaps, not so well known, of the unspoiled New England Village. The terms typical and unspoiled are used advisedly, as a reference to the illustrations will show. There are, possibly, no especially striking or far-famed structures, no wealth of fine carving or ornamental detail, no grand estates or mansion houses, yet from its early simplicity, and quality of chaste primness, the village has slowly developed, until, as it now stands, a characteristic chapter of New England endeavor lies spread out on the gently undulating plain, lapped by the salt waters of the inland cove on one side, and stretching out by the fertile meadows of the river on the other. The first temporary houses soon gave way to more permanent structures, and the tradition of restrained. conservative building has been faithfully followed even to the present day. Fortunately there was no occasion, and, what is more unusual, no inclination to depart from the customs and practices of the earlier settlers, in buildings...
