Excerpt: .organization, and those, statutory and otherwise, which govern public health administration. The first law providing for health organization was the Massachusetts law of 1797 establishing Boards of Health for towns and giving each board power to make such regulations as it judges necessary for the public health and safety. Since then the other states have made similar laws, the last enactment being that of Nevada in 1905, while many of the large cities have had special sanitary provisions incorporated in their charters. The type of local organization has varied in different states depending upon whether the administrative unit of government was the township or the county. The local authorities are required to keep the state authorities informed as to the sanitary conditions of their districts and in all cases local health ordinances must not contravene the laws of the state. Since 1855 each state...
