

Mo-O of the Kawainui: Short Fiction

By Lowell Uda

Createspace, United States, 2013. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 229 x 152 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book  Print on Demand .This collection of seven short stories and one long one, Mo-o of the Kawainui, after which the volume is named, represents an experiment in voice, my struggle to express fictively the complexities of my personal background and upbringing. The first, Crabs, represents my original breakthrough in voice. It is through the protagonist, Doc Chang, and his crab Chester that I am able to describe one of the teeming places of my childhood--a place where awe and imagination were alive every morning and every day--and to hear and see into the darkest, most subterranean places of my life. Despite his withdrawal from common humanity, the Chinese doctor and his pet crab have taught me to love Hawaii, the place of my birth, and to accept myself as a human being and to be open to spiritual transformation and renewal. The next six stories, The Jiro Stories, are about Jiro, a third generation Japanese American boy. His mother is a Mormon, and Jiro is being raised a Mormon. His religion places a barrier between himself and his local peers, and...
