Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from An Examination of the Expediency and Constitutionality of Prohibiting Slavery in the State of Missouri A Measure, in which the republic is more deeply concerned, than in any which has been discussed since the adoption of the Federal Constitution, is about to be brought before our national representatives. It will then be decided, whether Congress will give its sanction to the extension of a system which is repugnant to the fundamental principles of a republic. During the last session of this body, the inhabitants of Missouri petitioned for admission into the Union. As usual, the law authorising the erection of the territory into a state, was amended by annexing several conditions to the required permission. After several minor amendments had been proposed and adopted, a gentleman from New-York moved, that the further introduction of slavery or involuntary servitude be prohibited, except for the punishment of crimes, whereof the party shall have been fully convicted. This amendment was warmly opposed by the southern members. They exclaimed that it was unconstitutional, appealed to those local prejudices, which,...
