James M. Quarles, of Tennessee, Delivered in the House of Representatives, February 1, 1861 The House having under consideration the report from the select committee of thirty-three - Mr. Quarles said: Mr. Speaker: I have not sought the floor in the vain belief that any feeble utterances of mine can stay the tide of events which is, I fear, bearing us with irresistible force into the maelstrom of anarchy and civil war; but in the hope that I may possibly induce gentlemen on both sides of the House to pause and reflect before they plunge our common country irrevocably into revolution and fraternal strife. Sir, I should be recreant to the high trusts which a generous and patriotic constituency have confided to me, if I did not exert my every energy to allay the excitement which now unhappily pervades every section of our country, and do every act which patriotism can prompt to give peace to our distracted land. This is not the time for disquisitions upon the...
