Excerpt: . . . nary circumstances of life naturally call for its exercise or profession. We are at times inclined to omit, through mere human respect, the sign of the cross or our prayer at table, we omit the recital of the Angelus, we hide our medal of the Blessed Virgin and the like--and all this in our own houses or where we have a perfect right to have our own way without scandalizing anybody. This is wrong, for we have every reason to be proud of our faith. There are, moreover, few persons who fail to respect a consistent Catholic because of the outward exercise of his faith, when this is done with that gravity and simplicity which both befits religion and indicates a deep conviction. Such manifestation of religious faith often begets inquiry, and leads the stranger who perhaps looks for the redemption of Israel, to...
